In this story, we follow the lives of three employees of the controversial newspaper Tomorrow's Eye: Caroline, a promising reporter who can see the future; Bernie, a photographer who can use the symbols around him to predict the future; and Shane, a troubled man who can communicate with the dead. The three of them use their gifts to solve riddles that foreshadow events and potentially stop disasters, but the more personal foresights challenge the trio with the boundaries of their morals, old scars, drug abuse and the concept of agency versus an unavoidable step into the future.
