When I was nine, I spent an embarrassing amount of time dreaming of my wedding day. I had no idea who I was going to marry, but in my dreams he had a killer suit and a blurred out face like a criminal on TV. I seemed to have it all figured out, and quite honestly planning a wedding was really easy. Then I found a man, with an actual face, who liked me enough to put a ring on my finger, and suddenly planning a wedding didn't seem quite as easy as it did before I hit puberty. In reality, planning a wedding is stressful, ridiculous, and throughout the process you can count on being sweaty most of the time. Unveiled is a collection of awkward wedding planning experiences that can be used as a bride's helpful guide to planning her own big day, or (and more realistically) as a form of humorous entertainment to get her through the long and expensive year leading up to the wedding.
